Important information on taking ear impressions for professional custom-made in-ear earphones:

1. For taking ear impressions, use fine-grain, easily flowable ear impression silicone for a high level of impression precision and, if possible, flat impression pads or cotton pads that match the diameter of the ear canal.

2. When taking the ear impression, the mouth should be relaxed and closed until the ear impressions are taken. No chewing movements during the curing process, please!

3. When inserting the ear impression material into the ear, ensure that all areas of the outer ear shown in the example image and up to the second bend of the ear canal (see below) are completely molded without air traps. It is also important that ear impression material is built up in the area of the base, since the area of the outer concha is also very important for the construction of the earpiece and the positioning of the connector.

4. If the finished ear impressions are scanned with an ear impression scanner, please save the scan data for transmission as Name_First name.stl files and send them as a file attachment by email to info@fischer-amps.de.
